

HackerBusters

Painless Packet Poetry

This Painless Packet Poetry is designed to make you smile, while inspiring you to write some Painless Packet Poetry of your own.

Your assignment is as follows:

1. Write a Painless Packet Poem or to transform one of these poems to make it your own.
2. Use a program such as Adobe PhotoShop Elements®, Kid Pix®, or a word processing or desktop publishing program to illustrate your poem or create a background for it. You may want to print it on glossy photo paper to give it a professional look.
3. Present your completed poem to your teacher or your parents as a gift.

Online

It's quite fine
Online

The Hacker

It's always cloak and dagger
When I enter with my swagger

The Hacker 2

If it's confidential
I find it preferential

The Virus

I am a virus virulent
(meaning extremely poisonous)
Obnoxious and purulent.
(meaning full of pus, yuck!)

A Young Man Named Packet: A Limerick

There was a young man name Packet
Who put on his Internet jacket
He zoomed through the cables
With all of his labels,
And never created a racket

Tiny Packets

Invisible to the naked eye
Tiny packets jump and fly
Circling 'round the Internet
Hopping through each parapet
Dodging every microwave
And every hacking group enclave

—And—

When they're sent through airy space
As wireless bits and bytes they race
To get the files to your computer
So you will not need a tutor
To learn about the world and such
You'll like those packets very much

