

Securing a Global Network of Universities

ECCOM Says...

New York University in Shanghai is the first Sino-US joint venture with independent legal status that's been approved by the Ministry of Education in China. It's part of NYU's global network that also includes a site in Abu Dhabi and its original campus in New York City. Connecting these universities with each other presents a big security challenge. Not just from a network security standpoint—handling mobile apps, BYOD, staff, students, and branches around the world. But the research different departments are doing needs to be both shareable and protected.

“Connecting these universities with each other presents a big security challenge.”

As one of Cisco's biggest partner in China, our experience gave us the expertise to build a solution that could grow with NYU Shanghai. Using Cisco Enterprise and Security, ECCOM took a systematic Information Security Lifecycle approach to establish a sound security management foundation, building NYU Shanghai an IT infrastructure that can respond to any security challenge.

Meet other Cisco partners helping customers around the world.

