1. According to IDC, by 2020, 80% of companies believe industrial automation, connecting data at the center of the connected factory is key to increasing operational efficiency and optimizing your manufacturing processes. Cisco is uniquely positioned to help companies connect all of their equipment to Ethernet networks for lower costs. In fact, Cisco was recently named number one in market share for industrial networking.

2. Manufacturing has always been a rich target for cyberattacks, given the legacy systems and real-time operations that can be affected. Add in the risks of physical damage, facility shutdowns, and production losses, and you have a recipe for disaster. Cisco is the leader in industrial security, providing the tools you need to detect suspicious traffic, policy violations, and compromised devices within your factory environment. Cisco® technology is positioned to help unite IT and OT (and their convergence). We understand IT/OT (and their convergence).

3. If you do it right, a Wi-Fi network on the factory floor can help you reduce operational costs, enable factory restructuring, placing data at the center of your digital efforts by reducing downtime and breaches of customer data and intellectual property.
